

The increasing blandness of "free" radio has driven me to listen to XM. I do not live in an area where XM's traffic and weather are necessary, but when I travel it is nice to have this feature available to me. If local broadcasters want to increase their market share, then they need to fix their product not force legislation on others. If the free market is what we desire, then to restrict XM is to go against this principle.